Summary: The wastewater treatment process generates biosolids which are typically dewatered to about 20 percent solids content before they are hauled offsite for beneficial reuse at various composting facilities. Since 2019, the Lancaster WRP has been operating a pilot-scale air-drying process to further reduce the water content in a portion of its biosolids to accelerate drying and has achieved savings of $145,000 per year in hauling costs. Substantially more savings are possible with full-scale operation. The Chief Engineer and General Manager will provide an update on options to implement full-scale operation of biosolids air drying for the Lancaster and Palmdale WRPs.
